

Charlotte E. Kiraly

A mother lies asleep in Christ—
A husband feels the pangs of grief—
But each of us must pass away
As does the golden autumn leaf.
Her children, too, will shed a tear—
And ev'ry day will longer be
But mother only travels on
A quiet, glossy, peaceful sea.
And each of us shall also sail
When time has come for us to rest
When we shall gather over there
To mingle with the Godly blest.
