MILWAUKEE JOURNAL SENTINEL WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 2000

Schroeder spent most of his days running cigar stores

LeRoy Arthur Schroeder limped out of World War II into the family-run Bornheimer Cigar store business and pretty much stayed there for nearly 40 years before retiring in the mid-1980s.

"He never took vacations," said his wife, Nina. "We went on one cruise in our whole 58 years (of marriage). He was a hard worker. He didn't think anybody else could do his job."

He may have been right. The stores — once there were five in Milwaukee — closed shortly after he retired.

Schroeder eased up on activities in recent years but still found time to help unload food at the Oconomowoc Food Pantry until shortly before his death Saturday at the age of 80.

"He was always ready to help people," Nina said.

He also worked at American Legion Post 399 in Okauchee.

Nina and Roy — the name he used — had lived in Okauchee. When Roy was diagnosed with brain cancer seven weeks ago, they were living in Eagle with their son Scott.

Schroeder served with the 5th Armored Division during World War II, receiving the Purple Heart for wounds to both legs. Upon discharge, he joined the cigar store business founded by his father and a cousin. Roy and a brother, John, ran the businesses, with Roy serving as president.

The last store was at 720 N. Water St. At one time, the firm also had stores on the south and west sides of Milwaukee.

In addition to his wife, survivors include daughters Sharon Gall of Hartland and Sibyl Frakes of Roswell, Ga.; sons Stuart of Pewaukee, Spencer of Madison, and Scott of Eagle, and one sister, Joyce Groth of Muskego.

Visitation will be from 4 to 8 p.m. today at the Pagenkopf Funeral Home, 1165 Summit Ave., Oconomowoc. Funeral services will be at 10 a.m. Thursday at St. Joan of Arc Catholic Church, Nashotah.

Memorials have been suggested for the church or the MACC Fund.
