AN APPLE STORY TO HEED.

People Should be Careful in Making Investments That May Prove Unfruitful.

Ed. Freeman: -- On several occasions I have called attention to the inevitable demoralization of the western apple projects. Some have said I was a pessimist, others that I was meddling with extraneous matters. To the latter criticism I have only to say that I am paid for doing certain things, among them conservation of Wisconsin copital which has been go will be. I am not a pessimist on apple grow-ing into these projects by hundreds of thousands of dollars, and, as to being a pessimist, let's us look into the present situation. will be. I am not a pessimist on apple grow-ing—there is a fine future for the in-dustry—provided (and always pro-vided) they are grown close to the will be.

The Commercial West of Minneapolis is a reliable conservative journal with an inclination to boost for the far west. In its issue of November 5th, it prints from Tacoma, Washington: "The apple market is inactive, weak and in the buyers' favor, says the circular of the Northwestern Fruit Exchange, a growers' organization formed for the purpose of marketing the out put of its members," and adds: "Ship-ments from all over the Northwest are very heavy and a great deal of Bairdiand Farm Making an Enviable fruit is shipped by concerns having no facilities for wide distribution, which concentrates the offerings in a few of the largest markets and causes a generally weak tone to prevail." Maybe the above isn't "pessimistic." Perhaps Wisconsin people (especially widows and working girls) who have invested in western apple schemes
