Kight (formerly Annie Stewart of Little Prairie). The Kights are living at Plummer, Idaho, and have a fine home in the valley of the intermountain country at the foot of Bitter Root mountain. It is a place where their friends will not forget the welcome and the beautiful sights they enjoy while there. Other places which they visited were Vancouver, Victoria, B. C., Mount Rainier, National Park, Seattle, Portland, Salt Lake City, Denver, Omaha, and Chicago.

Joseph W. Faestel, a farmer south of Eagle, was seriously injured Saturday when he tried to stop the team from running away. The wagon ran over him and broke his leg below the knee and crushed several ribs into his lungs. His son-in-law, who had charge of the team was also injured but not seriously.

Frequent rains of late have given encouragement to farmers who were fearful of the shortage of the hay crop. Small grain looks fine now and with a good crop they will overcome the shortage of hay.

Last week Harvey Clemens, Harry Smart, Harry B. Burton and H. M. Lohm visited the condensary at North Prairie and by the courtesy of C. E. Nelson, manager, were shown through the condensary building. They were given an opportunity to watch the various processes from the time the milk enters to the time it comes out in cans, closed, labeled and ready for shipment. A large force is required to operate the machinery. It is a fine plant fully equipped. The testing is done by chemists who know the milk only by the number on the bottle and therefore are precluded from showing any preference. Powdered milk is also made here and Mr. Nelson surely takes advantage of every opportunity to fine a paying market for our dairy products.

Wm. G. McGee is confined to his home by illness.

The national convention of Modern Woodmen is in session at Chicago this week. The convention was to have been held in Milwaukee but on account of conditions there it was removed to Chicago. "NORTH OF NEVADA" TO BE SHOWN AT OPERA HOUSE

Fred Thomson's "North of Nevada" comes to the Eagle Opera House, June 28.

I've sold the water right for ten thousand dollars and Joe Deerfoot's riding out to the ranch how to get his signature. When this is told to Fred Thomson, in his latest thriller, "North of Nevada" that comes to the Eagle Opera House, he knows just Reggie, his former, knocks the astonished youth over into the dusty road, makes a tremendous jump over his horse, "Silver King" and is off on the dead run. Then follows one of the most remarkable of all justice races between Thomson and the Indian. He sees the Indian leave his horse and start across country. Thomson jumps on "Silver King" telling him to go home alone, makes a tremendous dive off a cliff and the race starts on foot, up and down cliffs, over hurdles, through water and then—see the finish yourself. 10 and 25 cents.

QUIET HOME WEDDING IS VERY LOVELY

The wedding of Miss Ethel Cation, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. David Cation and Mr. Warren Rolfe took place Tuesday forenoon at eleven o'clock in the home of the bride's parents at North Prairie.

Although a very quiet affair with only about twenty relatives present, it was nevertheless an occasion of much beauty. The ceremony was performed in the large living room by the Rev. Hoard of Clintonville.

The bridal party passed down the stairway and through the living room to an altar in the corner where it was decorated with pink and white roses and peonies. The rest of the room was decorated in pink and white flowers.

The bride's gown was peach crepe de chine trimmed in hand embroidery. She carried a shower bouquet of sweet peas and roses.

EAST WATERVILLE

EAST WATERVILLE.—The Welsh Gymanfa which held its one hundred seventh session in Jerusalem church, Wales, last week, attracted representatives of practically every Welsh Presbyterian church in Wisconsin and northern Illinois. The 170 sessions have been held in a period of 85 years.

The preaching was of the fervent Welsh type and held audience after audience, and to the Welshmer, gathered it was proof that the faith of their fathers still lives today.

The preaching was not the only thrilling event of the Gymanfa, for the singing stood out as something almost unparalleled outside of Welsh gatherings. The old Welsh anthems taken up and sung by the hundreds gathered were inspiring and beautiful. The mixed choirs of Bethesda and Jerusalem church furnished music which was so excellent that it would have stood competition with choirs of great city churches. The choirs sang under the leadership of Mrs. Nuoefler who has proven herself an expert director of vocal music in the past as well as in this particular instance.

The period of 85 years during which the Gymanfa has been in existence in Wisconsin has furnished an unlimited amount of story and reminiscence in connection with it. One of the first, if not the first, Wisconsin Gymanfa was held in the barn of the late Richard Jones, Bron Beilan, now the home of Mr. and Mrs. McDowell. They and their family are active and earnest members of Jerusalem church. Great progress has been made in the community since the early day Gymanfa.

According to the tales of the past, the Gymanfa was an event to be prepared for weeks in advance. The good housewives cut and sewed rags to make new rugs and carpets. There were papering and painting to be done to put the place chosen for the Gymanfa in condition to do it honor. Then there were many new dresses to be made, and as the time for the Gymanfa drew near there were marvelously appetizing viands to be prepared for the feasting in connection with it. There was the high feather bed, so voluminous that often it was necessary to use a chair to ascend to it, which was a billowy expanse of snowy linen when the visitor who was to occupy it arrived. And covering the bed was perhaps a flower basket quilt or an "Irish flower chain" quilt patched at the expense of hours and days of labor by the housewife.

None who tasted the fruit cakes prepared weeks ahead of time so they might be at their best and served at the Gymanfa will forget the inimitable flavor of that dainty.

When the great day came, horses were hitched to the old lumber wagon with a high spring seat and boards for making half dozen other seats with blankets and old quilts. Then off we went to Pine Lake and Genesee Depot to meet the delegates from Cambria, Columbus and other places. And lucky and honored was the one who was elevated upon the spring seat with the driver. Others, more humble, sat in the wagon box, riding for miles over rough roads. Every house in the community was a crowded hotel. As many were in the beds as could get into them and others were on lounges or on the floor. Many of these old pastors have sons and grandsons that are among the leading preachers of the country today. Dr. Silas Evans of Ripon College is a son of the late R. H. Evans of Jerusalem and Cambria. Dr. D. Jenkins Williams, Columbus, Ohio, is a grandson of the late Daniel Jenkins of Jerusalem. Dr. Howell Davies, Wauwatosa was a son of the late Rev. Daniel Davies, Oshkosh. Rev. D. K. Roberts, Racine, son of the Rev. Kendrick Roberts. Dr. Himam Foulks, Josiah Daniel, Edwin Jones and others are related to those pioneer preachers.

It was evident from the interest and the vast crowds of people that attended the meetings of last week in the busiest time of the year, that the Gymanfa of Wisconsin and northern Illinois is still a flourishing institution. * * *

COUNTY DANCE HALLS SUBJECT FOR DISCUSSION

DISTRICT ATTORNEY HERMAN SALLEN AND SUPERVISORS HOLD CONFERENCE

An ordinance prohibiting the chewing of gum between the hours of sunrise and sundown could not have furnished more ambitious points for the solution of those chosen to enforce it than has the Waukesha County dance hall ordinance, when discussed at a meeting of supervisors, held in the court house, under call of District Attorney Sallen, Tuesday evening. Because of dissatisfaction with dance-hall regulation in this county, Dist. Atty. Sallen summoned the supervisors for a conference regarding the operation of the ordinance, its provisions, and the duties and powers of the dance-hall supervisors. The discussion continued from 8 until 11 o'clock p. m.

Sallen opened the session by reading several important sections of the ordinance, interpreting the meaning, after which he stood a bombardment of questions which lasted for two hours. The district attorney explained that the supervisors have the powers of deputy sheriff over their particular dance halls and on the premises where the dance is being held, but that the dance supervisor's powers for making arrest ceased when the dance closed and the crowd in the dance hall had dispersed. He laid emphasis on the use of liquor, and while declaring that the supervisors had no right to search a patron without a warrant, they had the power to prevent the drinking of intoxicating liquor in the dance hall. He also spoke of allowing persons of under 16 years of age within the hall, and that idlers and loiterers should be sent away, as they are usually the one who cause trouble.

Scenes Immorality

Immoral dancing and petting parties are not to be tolerated, he stated, and the supervisors have the right to object to the proprietor who, if he fails to curb the offenders, then such offenders should be arrested.

Here are some of the questions asked, and answered by the district attorney:

"Has a dance supervisor the right to make arrest if fighting is going on outside a dance hall along the road which runs in front of the place?"

"The proprietor, in this case, probably owns to the center of the highway. If the fight is taking place on the premises the supervisor has the power to arrest. If it is taking place off the premises the supervisor should call the sheriff's office."

"Has the supervisor the powers of a deputy sheriff, within the dance hall?"

"He has, and may deputize anyone present to assist him in case of trouble."

"If the dance has ceased, the musicians gone and the floor cleared, yet many loiter about a saloon in connection, what power has the dance supervisor?"

"He is only a dance supervisor. According to the ordinance his powers as such cease, as well as his powers of deputy sheriff when the dance is over."

"Has a supervisor the right to search without a warrant?"

"No, but he can regulate the use of liquor within the hall, if displayed."

"The ordinance provides that the dance can be licensed to continue until 1 o'clock. However, according to the blue laws there can be no dancing on Sundays. Does the ordinance therefore hold between the hours of 12 o'clock Saturday evening and 1 o'clock Sunday morning?"

"No. The blue laws supersede the ordinance, but the ordinance does not state that the county clerk has to issue a permit to 1 o'clock on Sunday morning."

"If a Parent-teacher association gives a dance and invites the public, but no fee is charged, should a license be secured?"

"Yes."

"Does the use of a piano in place of an orchestra require a dance permit?"

"It depends. Discretion should be used in such cases. If the owner is using the piano to 'beat' the ordinance, he should be required to take out a license." County Clerk William Kohler, who was present, suggested that the dance supervisors notify him of persons giving public dances who do not procure license.

DEATH COMES PEACEFULLY AT WASHINGTON

"FIGHTING BOB" SUCCUMBS TO HEART TROUBLE AS RESULT OF BRONCHIAL ASTHMA

WASHINGTON (U. P.)—Robert Marion La Follette is dead.

"Fighting Bob," for twenty years United States senator from Wisconsin, staunch defender of what he believed was the popular will and independent presidential candidate last year passed on at his home here at 1:21 p. m., Thursday.

A gradual weakening of the heart muscles induced by a siege of bronchial asthma brought the end. He was seventy years old last Sunday.

La Follette lapsed into unconsciousness about half an hour before his death, but just a moment before his spirit took flight, he tried to rouse himself. It seemed to those of his family around his deathbed, as if he were trying to say something—communicate some last message or ask for something or someone.

"Earned Long Vacation"

But the effort proved fruitless. Too little strength was left in the body to voice the words.

That the senator knew death was upon him at least two weeks ago was disclosed by one of his family today.

Small children were playing noisily under his window as he lay in bed with the cold that ultimately brought his death.

"A life is a wonderful thing. I'd like to begin it all over again," he said, "But I think I have earned a long needed vacation."

For the last two weeks he had been confined to his bed with a cold which he contracted during recent sudden cold weather here. Passing his seventieth birthday Sunday, it seemed that he might be able to throw off the attack but his frail physique had been so weakened by continuous illness for the last two years, he soon afterwards took a turn for the worse. Death came peacefully and quietly with his wife and children at the bedside.

Ran for President

Starting life in a log cabin of a Wisconsin farm and fighting his way through most state offices, then to the senate of the United States, he had climaxed his career when he entered the presidential campaign last year and polled 5,000,000 votes against President Coolidge and John W. Davis, democratic nominee.

Instigator of the sensational Teapot Dome investigation La Follette took up the cudgel to fight what he believed to be corruption in government. Despite his age he stumped the country to the rim of the middle-west. He did not live to see the legal outcome of the sensational oil battle.

His strenuous efforts brought him but thirteen electoral votes from his home state and the day after election found him weak in health.

Politics next stripped him of all the honors of his long political service. First he was ousted from the Republican party of the senate by a vote of his party caucus, then he was shorn of his seniority honors, dropped as chairman of the manufacturers committee; his clerks were taken from him; he was forced to give up his preferred offices in the senate office building and take an undesired office like a newly elected senator. He came back to take his place fighting in the ranks just as he had fought for forty years. It was almost like the war days when he was "The lone man of the senate"—ostracized and denounced because of his opposition to the United States entrance into the war.

Was at Palm Beach

La Follette went to Palm Beach last winter and came back this spring tanned and feeling much better although it was apparent that he had not fully recovered. The strenuousness of his career dug deep lines on the face which only the final rest could erase.

During the two years of Congress closed last March, La Follette wielded his dominating influence upon important legislation. With his little group of followers in the house and senate, he held the balance of power between Republicans and Democrats. Whichever of the parties he aligned his forces with, was assured of a majority.

It was the La Follette group which combined with the Democrats to write the present tax law against the desires of the present administration. With the last congressional elections, however, his hold was weakened and his possibility of controlling the new Congress, which meets in December was negligible.

Robert Marion La Follette of Wisconsin was a symbol to many hundreds of thousands of people of all that was liberal and progressive in American political life.

More than any contribution or definite achievement, his aggressive leadership of American liberals and the tradition which gradually grew up about him served to make him the political idol of a large section of the voters of the Middle West.

He attained the political power, for which he strove so long, only late in his career, and then it served rather as a destructive force, for he was forced by his policies to play a game of blockade and counter-blockade. In the Sixty-eighth Congress, with the aid of the little band of "radicals," centering about him, he was able to hold the balance of power because of the close alignment between Democrats and Republicans.

Yet all his life was a fierce battle for liberal legislation, which was in no small degree successful.

Naturally, the course marked out by La Follette was bitterly resented by all conservatives, and he was both feared and denounced by both Republicans and Democrats, who preferred the old order. He was attacked as a socialist, even as a communist, both in public and private by the classes he himself assailed. The world will be compelled to await the verdict of history on his career.

From the first day when, as a stout, stocky boy of 9 he stood up bravely before the school board of the little town of Primrose, Wis., and told them that he "knew his sister and make a good school teacher," and that she deserved the place, his career has been a long, long fight, sometimes bitter, more often joyous in the sheer love of the fray.

His First Speech

He had driven to town, eleven miles, from their little prairie settlement, with this sister. The members of the school board looked her up and down gravely and shook wise old heads and stroked long, gray beards. She was too young and pretty to make a good school teacher, they decided. That was the beginning of "Bobbie's" political career. In a speech which would have done him proud in his later years he convinced the school board that his sister was the one teacher to fill the vacancy.

From his mother, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, he inherited the ever-present twinkle in his eye and his hearty laugh, and from his father, a descendant of those vigorous French-Huguenots, who left France to escape religious persecution, he inherited that tenacious and bulldog determination which has carried him through many a tussle where weaker men would have fallen.

Had the fates conspired to give La Follette the proper kind of background for success in Middle Western politics, they could not have dealt more kindly. Born on Flag Day, 1855, in a log cabin, "Bobbie" was brought up in the strength and vigor of pioneer traditions and pioneer life. Self-educated, he won his way to honors and graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1879. He was admitted to the bar a year later and the same year was elected district attorney of Dane county, after his initial fight against machine politics.

From that day onward every moment of his existence was spent in public life. Not once thereafter was he out of sight of some portion of the public eye.

Wife Real Helper

One of the greatest factors in the long fight which he has waged against monopoly control and the so-called interests has been the woman he married while yet in the university, Belle Case, of Baraboo, Wis. Not once has she hesitated during the course of his long career when he contemplated a step which would bring down merciless and scathing publicity.

"Go ahead, Bob!" she would always reply when, as he always did, he asked her advice in regard to some political move. For, besides raising a family of four, Robert M. Jr., Fola Phillip and Mary, she has played an active part in his political life, going with him on many long campaigns, often taking the stump at his side.

From 1880 until 1884 he was district attorney and they talk yet in Madison of this young firebrand who, by the sheer fire of his oratory, won case after case. The next step was Congress, and after a fierce battle, which marked the beginning of the end of "machine" politics in Wisconsin, he was elected to Congress in 1885 and served until 1891. Although he was unknown and looked upon with suspicion as a "radical," and given a place on an unimportant committee, he made an enviable record during these two terms, preventing a big lumber deal on the Indian reservations and playing a prominent part in the framing and passage of the McKinley bill.

La Follette, upon his return from Congress, swept out with the rest of the party in the Democratic landslide of 1890, turned the eye of zealous gladiator upon the railroads of his native state. It took him six years to break down completely the control of the "machine" and elect himself to the governorship. Then it was another two years before he succeeded in gaining a legislature in sympathy with progressive legislation.

But under La Follette's leadership taxes were equalized; the railroads were compelled to pay in more than $700,000 more each year; a state-wide primary election law was secured, which put an end to convention-hall purchasing of votes; the railroad commission was organized, and railway rates were appreciably lowered and Wisconsin became known throughout the union as the most progressive and forward-looking of states.

Sent to the Senate

He resigned the governorship to become senator in January, 1905, though he hesitated long before taking that step. He felt that there was much work still to be done in Wisconsin, but believed the senate offered him an opportunity to serve a greater number of people. Senate leaders also sought to repress the militant young westerner. He was given unimportant places on committees, but despite this he unearthed an enormous coal and oil "deal" and gave the old line leaders no rest.

Many times during his long service in the senate he underwent feats of actual physical endurance which would have intimidated a six day bicycle rider. He staged filibusters which amazed his opponents and on one occasion he held the floor of the house for almost three days, cutting the federal appropriation by two billion dollars.

Three times during his political career his name went before the Republican convention for president. In 1912 he received twenty-five votes, and might have received the nomination had it not been for some skillful maneuvering by old line leaders.

It was during the World War that "Fighting Bob" met the supreme test, and his face became lined, his hair grey and his straight shoulders stooped. "The lone man of the senate"—no one will ever know, La Follette confessed in later years, what those agonizing months of ostracism, denunciation and vilification meant. Yet he stood by the principles for which he had fought so long, even during the fever of war.

He opposed the entrance of the United States into the war, but once this country was committed he backed every measure in Congress for the support of the soldier. It took courage, however, in the midst of the war, to advocate bills for conscription of wealth as well as conscription of men, but La Follette did this and thereby gained the everlasting enmity of the wealthy class.

Reputated by U. of W.

Probably the greatest blow that the war dealt was the attack made upon him by his beloved state university, that he had regarded as a stronghold of liberal thought. A number of the professors passed a resolution condemning Senator La Follette for his war stand and he was burned in effigy by the student body.

But in 1923 the state legislature passed a resolution condemning the men who had censured La Follette and in the elections of the previous year he had amassed the greatest majority ever given a public official for such a position. Those who deserted "Fighting Bob" during the war came back beneath the La Follette banners.

No man in American life ever had greater opportunities to further his private fortunes, but La Follette owned very little aside from the old homestead, a few miles from Madison, and there is a mortgage on this which he was never able to raise during his lifetime. In fact, he was scarcely able to keep the buildings in repair and one of the finest evidences of the affection which Wisconsin people had for him were the annual gatherings at the La Follette farm, when people by the thousands from all over the state congregated at the farm to set things to right, shingling, repairing and even rebuilding the farm home and barns.

DRUNKEN DRIVER IS SENTENCED TO 3 MONTHS

WALTER GRUNDMAN, RECENTLY FREED FROM JAIL SENT BACK FOR LONGER TERM

It doesn't pay in the eyes of Walter Grundman to drive upon public highways while intoxicated, especially if an accident has resulted or the offender has been in court on the same charge before.

Walter Grundman learned this fact Tuesday morning when he was sentenced by Judge T. W. Parkinson to serve three months in the Waukesha county jail on such a charge. Grundman was arrested several weeks ago on a charge of driving while intoxicated but the charge was reduced to reckless driving for which he served a term in the county jail. On June 11 he departed and took his automobile which had been held in the sheriff's garage with him. At that time he was advised to sell the machine.

While driving Sunday he collided with another machine on the county highway and a charge of driving while intoxicated was placed against him. Mr. Grundman pleaded guilty.

Frank Secker was more fortunate, however, it being his first offense and there was no accident as a result of his driving. He was fined $25

WAUKESHA BOY IS HONORED AT EASTERN SCHOOL

SCOTT KERR LOWRY PLAYS PROMINENT PART IN CLASS DAY EXERCISES AT DARTMOUTH

The following is a telygram received from Hanover, N. H.

The following is a message received Tuesday morning from the Collegian Bureau, Boston, Mass., in request made by the Freeman following an earlier telegram from the same news source which read: "Dartmouth's highest degree for Waukesha boy who participates impressive traditional ceremony."

Boston, Mass., June 23.—At Hanover, N. H., Dartmouth college closed its one hundred fifty-sixth academic year by graduating 377 members of the 1925 senior class. Graduation exercises started early this morning with the class assembling at the senior fence. The impressive academic procession formed with the senior class followed by President Hopkins, the trustees, recipients of honorary degrees, members of the faculty and returning alumni. The men to whom Dartmouth today gave its diploma came from many states and from all parts of the country. Included among them was a prominent Waukesha, Wis., boy, Scott Kerr Lowry, who was awarded a degree of bachelor of science and who played a most prominent part in the class day exercises of yesterday, especially the solemn sachen oration, a custom held over from the days when Dartmouth was an Indian school.

Scott is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Lowry who with their daughter, Jean, are attending the exercises at Dartmouth.

KINGSTON DAY AT MUKWONAGO ONE BIG TIME

NINETY-SEVEN MEMBERS OF FAMILY COME TOGETHER FOR ANNUAL PICNIC REUNION

Many members of the Kingston families, old and young, big and little, rich and poor, if there are any poor, Kingstons by birth and Kingstons by marriage, came together for the annual reunion and picnic on Saturday at the home of William Kingston, Mukwonago. The exact number present was 97, and an exact statement of the occasion might be that a delightful day was enjoyed by all.

A picnic dinner, a program, annual election of officers, and above all visiting, made up the great day. Mrs. William Connell of this city read a paper made up of limericks and jokes on the family, and Mrs. W. A. McFarlane of this city read a history of the family, both full of interest.

Annual election of officers resulted in the choice of Goodhand Kingston of Muskego as president, Earl Pierce of Elkhorn as vice president, and Miss Lillian Kingston of Milwaukee as secretary and treasurer.

Some of the far-away members of the family present at the reunion were Mrs. Findley Cook and family, St. Paul; Dr. A. M. Purves and family, Des Plaines, Ill.; Mrs. Martha Pinney, her son and daughter, Sturgeon Bay. From this city went Mr. and Mrs. William Fletcher and family, Dr. and Mrs. W. A. McFarlane and family, Mr. and Mrs. William Connell, John Connell and their families, Elkhorn Burlington and other cities were represented.

It was a regret to all that Sam Kingston, aged 79, the oldest member of the family, was not able to be present. Mr. Kingston has resided in Muskego 70 years and is universally esteemed. He has not been well for several weeks.

AGRI-GRAMS

By W. A. Freehoff

About once a year the Wisconsin Experiment Station sends out a bulletin under the caption of "New Pages in Farm Progress." A short, comprehensive review of the results of the experimental work done in the past year by the college scientists is given. The 1924 report has just been made public, and contains the following interesting paragraph by E. A. Birge, president of the University of Wisconsin:

"New pages in farm progress would have been a strange title for a report not many years ago. For of all industries the farm has been the most conservative from time immemorial. Yet today few industries are changing more rapidly both as regards the management of the farm itself and as regards the relation of the industry in the general scheme of society. This is largely the result of more than forty years of work in experiment stations, liberally supported all over the country both by the nation and the states.

"This work is not complete, indeed, has hardly begun. More than seventy five years of statehood have passed, but Wisconsin is still far from being fully developed agriculturally. Almost countless problems are pressing for solution and the future, we are sure, will bring as many more of its own. Years will pass before agriculture finds a broadly complete basis in science."

One of the most interesting pages in this report relates to the 'Door county war upon grasshoppers. It has been discovered that grasshoppers are very fond of common table salt and molasses. Thus by mixing saw dust, salt, and molasses with some arsenic, and scattering this "food" over the fields, it has been possible to get 100 per cent crops for the first time in forty years, and at a cost of less than ten cents an acre for the material used. This little bit of knowledge should prevent any widespread locust plague in this state.

The fact that two cuttings of alfalfa are better than three in Wisconsin is again reiterated. All the experiments prove that early cutting increases blue grass, and weakens the root development so that the second crop is not nearly so large as it would be under later cutting. For Wisconsin conditions, therefore, farmers are urged to let their alfalfa mature fully before cutting, and to cut only twice. Then, if the farmer can resist the temptation to pasture his alfalfa fields in fall, the danger of winterkilling has been reduced to a minimum.

Wisconsin holds highest rank as a pea canning state, and it is beginning to assert a leadership in sweet corn. This development is being made possible by the work of the experiment station. About 640,000 cases a year is the present production. The station is trying to improve the Wisconsin sweet corn in yield, quality, and uniformity. Several new strains already give promise of being better than standard varieties, but it will take about two years longer to be sure of permanent results.

Professor Macklin gives suggestions regarding cooperative marketing, with particular reference to potatoes, and dairy products. He suggests that the state be divided into four major commercial potato growing districts. It is contemplated that such organization of the Wisconsin potato industry will, when efficiently operated, lead to the eventual reduction of marketing costs, render more efficient marketing services, improve the quality of potatoes shipped to markets, and create a greater demand.

The experiment station is continuing its study of the effect of sunlight in animal husbandry. Particular study has been made of the effect of sunlight on growing chickens. It was found that a certain amount of sunlight daily is necessary for the normal development of the chicks. Chicks exposed to ultra violet light from a quartz mercury lamp for five minutes also developed normally. Still more interesting is the fact that food exposed to the ultra violet rays was changed in such manner that it had properties absent before the treatment, and gave the same results as exposing the chickens themselves to the light. These studies have really just begun, but they are highly significant as far as they have gone and hint that a revolution in feeding methods may be imminent.

The progress of the automobile business has been one of the marvels of the age. But the progress of the radio business promises to be equally marvelous,—and after the radio, what? It is impossible to be certain of anything but the fact that we are entering into an era which in the future will be known as the era of mechanical progress.

The governor has signed the Miller bill which in its effect will prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in Wisconsin. The measure will undoubtedly be contested in the supreme court, with a good chance of its constitutionality being maintained. The makers of butter substitutes are fighting a losing fight, not because they have such a bad product but that its sale, the dairy interests claim is based upon a certain type of misrepresentation. It is upon this basis that it is hoped to justify the prohibitory act before the supreme court. The United States Chamber of Commerce squelched re-good straw to indicate which way the wind is blowing.

Recent sales of pure bred dairy cattle, particularly the Holstein and Guernsey national sales, indicate that confidence is again quite largely restored. There is a marked absence of sensational prices, which is as it should be, as the pedigree speculator has been a harmful influence in all breed organizations. Prices should be high enough to give suitable reward to the conscientious and skillful breeder, but the dairy business should be kept out of the gusher oil well class, where abnormal reward is given without adequate service being returned. The pure bred dairy business should be on such a basis that the average farmer can enter without getting out of his depth.

LA FOLLETTE BURIED UNDER OLD OAK TREE

NO RITUAL, MUSIC STATE UNIFORMS OR SALUTES MARK CEREMONIES

By PAUL R. MALLON

Madison, Wis.—Under an oak tree out on a slope commanding a silver sheen Wisconsin lake, Robert M. La Follette was buried among the memories of his childhood.

With reverent simplicity, the body was taken from the statehouse down through a two mile lane of silent thousands and returned to the dust from which he sprang.

No Pomp

There was no long ritual, no music, no state uniforms, and no military salute. The eyes of the fighting La Follette left behind were dry of tears. There was no display of mourning in dress or emotion. The ceremony was carried through with resigned modesty just as he had wished.

The whispering oak was the only monument on the family plot in Forest Hill cemetery to mark the graves of members of the La Follette family who are buried there.

The two hundred honorary pall bearers, representing the United States Senate both houses of the state legislature, state officials, political leaders, and friends, were lined in the driveway before the grave.

The widow, Mrs. Belle Case La Follette, who is loved throughout the state as much as her husband, the sons, Robert Jr. who is a picture of his father 40 years ago; and Phillip; the two daughters, Mrs. George Middleton and Mrs. Ralph Sucher, with relatives, were grouped before the grave.

Hundreds of Friends

Hundreds of friends were crowded behind the pallbearers. A wall of flowers five feet high was built behind the grave. Others were strewn about upon the grass.

The new grave is just at the right of his father's, next is his mother's and women members of the family are buried beyond. Beside La Follette is reserved place for other members of the family.

The ceremony did not last more than 10 minutes. The short prayer by Dr. Haydon was the only word spoken. The casket was immediately lowered into the grave and earth was covered over it. Later the family expects to put a small mark at the foot of the grave merely to identify its resting place, but for the present ne Wisconsin oak tree, which was born with him more than half a century, will be his only monument.

WOOL GROWERS ARE URGED TO CROWD MARKET

AUTHORITIES FEEL HOWEVER THAT HOLDERS SHOULD NOT BE IN HURRY

Madison, June 19—Wool growers are being urged not to crowd the market.

With wool prices swinging back into fair recovery from the weakness developed during the winter and early spring, market authorities feel that holders should be in no hurry about selling their clip of Badger wool. They are making this appeal in face of the fact that there is more wool to sell this year and that the stage of any world shortage has been passed.

"The wool situation is decidedly better," declares J. E. Poole, secretary of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange and a well-known market reporter. "The domestic market is ignoring foreign trade although a change for the better is detected everywhere. It is only necessary to sit still in the boat and not crowd the market thereby playing into the hands of dealers and millmen."

Poole points out that mills are short of wool and must replenish stocks. Woolen mills are in good position and knitters are getting big orders only the worsted situation being dull.

Other Experts Agree

Gilbert Gusler market authority for standard farm papers has this to say of the same situation: "On statistical grounds, I would be inclined to look for a further rise in wool prices in the next two or three months. The last report on mill sticks, which was as of March 31, showed them to be unusually small. The same was true of dealers' holdings."

"While mill consumption of wool has fallen off somewhat since mid-winter, it is still at a rate that is more than twice our annual production. Cloth markets experienced no such crisis as occurred in raw wool and, even though the business is not rushing, the mills seem to have a very fair volume of orders booked ahead. This is particularly true of the woollen mills, the worsted business still being a little slow. This points to a continuation of a rather high rate of mill consumption. Our prices are not high enough to attract any large volume of imports. In addition to such considerations, there is the close adjustment between world production and consumption with no large reserves such as were on hand five years ago."

"Quite as important as the statistical basis is the fact that it is possible to do business on the advance in prices in the last few weeks. Some of the buying has been speculative, but mills are purchasing also and I believe it will be possible for sellers to push prices still higher before buyers will begin to drop out."

Wisconsin Holds Wool

Very little of the wool in Wisconsin has been sold, especially in the upper part of the state, according to Frank Kleinhein, extension sheepman of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture. In fact there are a great many sheep which have not been sheared owing to the recent cold weather.

In the southern part of the state some farmers in need of cash have been forced to sell their wool, whereas undoubtedly they would have received more for it had they been able to hold it or pool it. Kleinhein states that the pool is being urged to hang onto the wool this year for the better prices which later seem so likely.

TWO FINED FOR DISTURBING DANCE PARTY

PLEAD GUILTY TO CHARGE AN-NOYING ATTENDANTS AT PROSPECT HILL DANCE

Charged with having caused a disturbance at a dance held under auspices of the Farm Bureau, at Prospect Hill, Friday evening, Robert Moss, 16, and Joseph Egofski, 23, were arraigned before Judge T. W. Parkinson today, in Municipal court.

Egofski appeared with a blackened eye. Report as to how he received the injury were at variance. It was stated by one of the court officials that the young man was struck by a bystander, while another person present at the time, declared Egofski must have been injured by falling down. The young man, it was said, did not enter the hall but was causing disturbance on the outside.

Sheriff Owen Owens and Deputy Philip Herbrand made the arrests on complaint which came to the sheriff's office. Both boys are employed on farms in the vicinity of Prospect. They were each sentenced to pay a fine of $10 and costs.

After several months of continuous search, the sheriff's department, on Friday, located Otto Ossman, wanted here on a charge of abandonment of his wife and family. Deputy Don McKay will return with the defendant sometime today.

John Prier and George Norton were arraigned today on charges of being intoxicated, and S. Slinger, on a charge of vagrancy.

STATE PRESS COMMENTS ON LA FOLLETTE

WAS CLASSED AS EXTREMIST;
WAS "ADVANCED THINKER"
SAYS SHEBOYGAN PRESS

MADISON, Wis. (U. P.)—Editorial comment on the life and works of Senator La Follette follows:

Sheboygan Press: "Like all men who advocate new principles, he was classed as an extremist, but time has demonstrated, by adoption of many of those principles into laws, that he was an advanced thinker. In Wisconsin his name will stand as a reminder that many of our best laws were his handiwork."

Superior Telegram: "Robert M. La Follette has this interesting distinction that those who were closest to him, those who knew him best, the people of his own state, were his most hearty admirers, his most eager followers. * * * Those who knew this great leader best; those of his own state who had been able to watch his activities longest and under the most favorable circumstances were his most ardent and zealous admirers. They judged him not always by what he said but by what he did and by those things which the consistent course of his had made it plain he stood for."

Was Obstructionist

New York World: "Within his own party and to the majority policy of his party, La Follette was no doubt an obstructionist. Yet, it is a fact that this man who has more often been called an obstructionist than any other man of his own day, was personally responsible for more legislation than any of his contemporaries."

The Washington Post: "The death of Robert M. La Follette, senator from Wisconsin, removed from public life one of the most picturesque and radical politicians in recent American history."

St. Louis Globe Democrat: "He was a profound student of many public problems and a one-man fact finding commission on many activities. What he did for Wisconsin university ought always to be gratefully remembered. That there seems at this university to be less of scholastic Brahminism and more of sympathy for every-day humanity and its practical problems than at any other American institution is attributed more to La Follette than any other man."

San Francisco Examiner: "He was the most compelling figure in our public life, and his bitter life-long battle with those who regard government as the peculiar instrument of privilege will long stand forth as the gift of a brave, unbending character, the gift of a brilliant, constructive, never-resting brain."

Not Without Honor

Minneapolis Tribune: "Here, pre-eminently, was one prophet who was not without honor among his own neighbors. Time and again his enemies said Wisconsin was about to turn against him, and each time the forecasters were confounded."

Indianapolis Star: "He preferred leadership in a fight that was destined to failure rather than the obscurity of success sared with others."

Wisconsin State Journal: "Senator La Follette created and gave direction to the 'Progressive movement' The underlying motive in this political faction is the economic independence of the man. * * * There is the personal side. The charm of Senator La Follette, the magnetism, drew people close to him. Few men have won more devoted friendships."

EFFORT MADE TO PLACE NAME ON THE BALLOT

BLAINE SPOKEN OF PROMINENT-
LY; WILL TAKE REINS OF PRO-
GRESSIVE PARTY IN WISCONSIN

MADISON, Wis. (U. P.)—A campaign to return Mrs. Robert M. La Follette, wife of the dead Progressive chieftain, to the seat in the United States senate made vacant by the death of her husband, got under way in the legislature, Friday.

Petitions were circulated this morning by friends of the La Follette family, to obtain 3,117 signatures necessary to place Mrs. La Follette's name on the ballot.

Has Been Active

Mrs. La Follette has been active in Wisconsin politics, for years. In the last presidential campaign she stumped the state for the Third Party ticket. She is recognized as a figure in the national women's movement and has the reputation for political acumen and leadership which distinguished her husband throughout his spectacular career.

Reports from Washington today indicate eastern Progressives are urging Robert M. La Follette, Jr., to make the race to succeed his father. In event Mrs. La Follette should decline to stand for her husband's senate seat, Robert, Jr., could claim allegiance of Wisconsin Progressives.

While Governor Blaine would not commit himself today, it is regarded as probable that he will call a special election to fill the unexpired term of the dead senator. Should either Mrs. La Follette or Robert La Follette, Jr., come out as a candidate, the Wisconsin executive would, it is said, forego senatorial aspirations until 1926.

May Make Appointment

There is the possibility that Governor Blaine will, as provided by state election laws, decide to ask the legislature to authorize him to appoint a successor to Senator La Follette, and that such appointment might fall to one of the La Follette family as a matter of question. It is regarded as unlikely that the executive will leave the senatorial seat vacant until 1928, when the term expires.

The candidacy of Mrs. La Follette was sponsored by Assemblyman William Olson, Monroe, a life-long follower of Senator La Follette and a state Progressive leader. Olson would not discuss the matter today, for reasons of delicacy, other than to state that "if Mrs. La Follette consents to stand for her husband's seat in the senate, Wisconsin Progressives will rally to her support."

PARTY FACES UNCERTAIN FUTURE IN WISCONSIN

MADISON, Wis.—The party of Senator Robert M. La Follette, which within a short quarter of a century grew to be a formidable factor in national politics, now faces an uncertain future, leadership and disorganized.

Harrassed by internecine strife and lacking unity which the commanding personality of the dead Third Party chieftain inspired throughout the most turbulent era of Badger political history, the Progressive movement today marked time on the threshold of a new day.

Governor John J. Blaine, who is spoken of as a probable candidate for La Follette's seat in the United States senate, will take the reins of the party. Robert M. La Follette, Jr., chairman of the State Central committee, nominal head of the party, will, it is expected, throw his support to Blaine.

Progressives Split

That Blaine can muster undivided support of all elements in the party is regarded with doubt by political observers. Wisconsin Progressives have been split into factions since 1923.

Secretary of State Fred Zimmerman has generally been regarded as spokesman for the anti-Blaine group. Attorney General Ekern, who is reckoned as an administration supporter, is counted on to take a part in the struggle for control of the Progressive organization. Ekern, a close friend of the dead senator, may decide to make the race for the senate against Blaine, in the forthcoming special election.

Election of Governor Blaine to the United States senate would place Lieutenant Governor Henry Huber in the executive chair. Huber will, if he becomes governor, consent to make the race to succeed himself, according to precedent, or he may decide to enter the contest for United States senator.

The later contingency would reverse the probable slate which, in the event Blaine succeeds to La Follette's toga, is likely to be Ekern for senator and Huber for governor.

SEE IMPORTANT REALIGNMENT OF PARTY IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON—An important realignment in politics was foreseen today as the result of the death of Senator La Follette.

While his subordinates in the Independent Third Party movement proclaimed their intention of perpetuating the Third party, which he founded, none would hazard a guess as to who might be the new leader.

On the other hand, Republicans saw a break-up of the "La Follette bloc" in the farming northwest, particularly in La Follette's home state of Wisconsin, which he had held by sheer dominance of individual popularity. The death of La Follette, they believe, may open the states to Republican rule.

La Follette wished that the party he organized in the last campaign should continue. He had privately expressed to his associates desire that they carry forward the banner he carried in an effort to bring about eventually the great changes he sought—election of judges, curbing of the power of the supreme court and complete readjustment of present railroad operations.

La Follette had many able lieutenants. William H. Johnston, machine Union president, is expected to continue as chairman of the executive council of the Third party. Robert M. La Follette, Jr., may receive
