Cruver's Contributions to Eagle Township Were Many

(Editor's Note: The following story by Barry Rohan, Waukesha Freeman staff writer, is a tribute to Charles Cruver, who has retired as Eagle town clerk. It is being reprinted here because of its interest to Eagle residents.)

"Nobody could beat him for town clerk. Everybody was satisfied. He's a wonderful and colorful guy."

Anton Steinhoff, an Eagle town chairman for nine years (1924-33), described a rare political phenomenon: Charles E. Cruver, 88, who last month retired as Eagle town clerk after 50 years of service.

Steinhoff recalled Cruver's witty comments sparked routine readings of the town minutes at innumerable meetings.

In 1912 when Cruver took office the town was younger and needed less supervision. The board met irregularly and the clerk's job paid $275 a year. It was recently boosted to $800 a year but that was after Cruver stepped down from the job with a year left on his term.

Through all his years on the town board Cruver has just one small complaint:

"Sometimes they talk too much."

It's an occupational grievance shared by his spry wife Carolyn, to whom he has been married over 60 years, eight children, 15 grandchildren and 16 great-grandchildren ago.

"I pushed the board off into the kitchen," she said. "They do talk too much and I'm no politician."

For the past two or three years the board met at the Cruver home on highway NNN, south of highway 99. The town ledgers, kept in Cruver's precise handwriting, were housed there in a large cabinet. The three foot square town safe was located in the living room. Annually Cruver made out to his rural mailbox, Cruver slipped and fell on the ice. He received a fractured pelvis. After the complicated tax assessment rolls.

"The job was just enough work to keep me occupied," he said.

Last February while enroute to an operation he left the hospital and again made out the tax rolls. But this time — after 50 years — he felt the job next year would be a little too much for him.

Most of the books have been removed to the new Eagle town hall where they will be kept by Cruver's successor, Edward Honeyager, Eagle, rte. 2.

"I guess he didn't show it but in his own way he must've felt deep regret when they took those ledgers away," his daughter Harriet, who teaches school in Greenfield, commented.

Cruver has lived in the Eagle area since he was 15 years old. As a youth he attended school at Elkhorn, Whitewater and Merton.

He was secretary of the Jericho creamery for many years and of the Eagle Masonic lodge for 25 years. He joined the lodge in 1898 and is still a member. Cruver was also a clerk of the Eagleville school board for many years.

"I was told if I had 2 or 3 more secretarial jobs I wouldn't have to work for a living," he quipped.

Cruver operated an 80 acre dairy farm until he was 72 years old. Later he raised chickens but sold out of that business about five years ago.

Since his back injury and retirement Cruver is both free and willing to rest on the front porch of his home which dates to 1857 and was built by one of Wisconsin's first senators, Isaac Walker.

Besides their daughter Harriet, the Cruvers have two daughters and five sons.

Harry is an air force colonel working in the Pentagon, Washington, D. C.; John works for the Borden Co., in Connecticut. Robert is in Lake Geneva. Myron and Warren both live in Milwaukee.

Two other daughters settled in Wisconsin. Marguerite Smart lives in Mukwonago and Betty Munger in Delavan.

Right Off the Cobb

By John Cobb

The Sharon Reporter last week paid tribute to a former resident, who has been named to this year's West Point class. The editorial said, in part:

"There are those who, now can again say, 'I told you so!' Phil, you see, spent his first eight years in formal education at little one-room Salt Box school, three miles northwest of Sharon.

Whether one is 'for or against' one room schools, one has to admit some of their 'products' are the best. Phil is one of these.

Rural living can be interesting — and rewarding. It all depends on the individuals."

That always has been my feeling on one room schools. And the days of many of them are numbered and they will pass from the Wisconsin scene. I still hate to think about it.

It really is the teacher that counts. All these costly educational plants don't matter one bit if there isn't a real teacher. And, no matter how backward the physical plant, a good teacher can produce educated students.

I shouldn't get off on this subject. It makes me sad, then bitter, then angry.

Another place (while I'm upset about schools) where I think the educators are goofing, is in the school music programs.

May 12 the big yellow school buses began arriving at the college at 7:30 a. m. It was after 6 p. m. before the last of them had departed for home. That meant students had a mighty long day.

For years there has been talk about this problem (not so much here in Whitewater where the kids are home, but in all these other communities where the pupils are gone for some 12 hours or more) but nothing is done. I think the simple solution would be to keep the junior high kids at home.

Let the festival and parade be something for their high school years. They don't have to be up here marching and performing while they're in junior high. The music instructors say they need experience. Let 'em get it at home. They always can march around the block or through their own business district.

That would mean a shorter, less hectic day for the judges, etc., as well as the high school students. Maybe the day could start at 9 a. m. instead of 8, and be ending about 5, instead of 6 p. m.

One more thing, it is the junior high youngsters who bring their water pistols, pea shooters, etc.

I just think it would be a nicer day for all if they stayed home. —And it wouldn't be old hat to them in their freshman or sophomore years!

You always are told that wild animals have so much common sense, etc. I don't believe it. I believe most wild animals do, but there must be stupid birds and animals, the same as with people.

Now take the case of two ducks nesting in our back field. —These are wild ducks, you know, with no strings attached. One built her nest at the foot of a large lilac bush. The eggs are in the center, well protected from large animals or people passing by.

Locating her was strictly a fluke. The dog wandered over to use the bush and the duck flew off the nest. She flew only a few feet from the lilac bush, so I figured she had a nest. I checked and found several eggs. I didn't touch them and called the dog away. The duck has now hatched her brood.

When I'd go out and look at her, she wouldn't move as much as an eyelid (if ducks have them) when I parted the branches for a closer look. —I figured this was a smart gal.

The other duck has built her nest right on top of the manure pile. The merits of this location aren't clear to me in that it is wide open, only about four feet from the barn door where there is much equine and human traffic and it also stinks.

The wife said maybe she felt by getting up in the air (the pile is about four feet high) she figured she'd be safer from rats or animals which might eat eggs.

These eggs should hatch any day now. Seems like a poor place to start life, even for a duck!

La Grange

There will be no church school classes or morning worship service at the La Grange Methodist church Sunday, May 27. The annual conference of the East Wisconsin conference of the Methodist church is being held in Janesville at Car-gill Methodist church, and there will be worship services there at 8:30 and 10:30 Sunday morning.

Mrs. Lloyd Taylor will present her piano pupils in their annual recital at the La Grange church Saturday evening, May 26. Everyone in the community is invited to attend.

The last annual picnic of the Bird school district will be held at 12:30 p. m. Sunday, May 27. Mrs. Alex MacKenzie, teacher, and the school board invite all district residents to attend this final picnic, and ask that they bring sandwiches, a dish to pass and their own table service.

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Mikelsen returned to their home here last week after spending the winter with the James Halverson family in Pasadena.

Mr. and Mrs. Murl Seitz recently returned home from a three-week motor trip to the west coast. They visited Mr. Seitz' sisters at Norman, Okla., and San Angelo, Calif.; the Royal Woodchicks, San Antonio, Tex.; Mr. and Mrs. Jay Agen and Doris Patchen Hurler, San Diego; and spent several days with their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Emmet Quinn, and the Howard Leans in San Clemente, Calif. On their return trip they toured St. Lake City, attending a broadcast of the Mormon Tabernacle choir, and visited relatives at Holdrege, Nebr.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Lawton and Mary, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Bethke attended the Milwaukee county African violet show at the Wauwatosa recreation center, Sunday, and also visited Whitnall park, Hales Corners, to see the floral displays there.

The Rev. and Mrs. Douglas O. Anderson, Wales, and Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Taylor were dinner guests of the Dean Taylors Sunday. Monday the Taylors entertained the Rev. and Mrs. Marvin Schilling, Appleton, at dinner.

Mashed potatoes from a box are familiar, but with a new type flakelet you'll need even less shelf space to store them. The new potato flakelet has been developed by the U. S. department of agriculture and is now on the grocer's shelves. For the past five years potato flakes have been popular for home use. The new flakelet is a denser dehydrated mashed potato product which takes only a third to a half as much storage space.

Hotels, restaurants, the military and institutional users are expected to be prime users of the new flakelets. The home kitchen shelf, too, will carry more packages of the flakelets in the same space.

You won't have to change your way of using the dehydrated potatoes for the flakelets reconstitute just as easily and quickly as the old style potato flakes.

Some of the dozen plants now dehydrating potatoes are changing to the new process for producing flakelets. Cost is expected to be in line with other dehydrated potato products now on the market.

Knowles Deserves the Nod

The Republican party of Wisconsin will make a mistake if they discard the experienced and well qualified candidate Warren P. Knowles at the nominating convention this weekend. Knowles has distinguished himself over a 20 year period in state government. He has been a party man and stumped the state loyally on behalf of state and national candidates down through the years. He deserves the party support for his own candidacy and should get it.

In our opinion he has the best chance of defeating aspiring Democratic candidate Reynolds this fall and this should be a must for Republicans and Independents alike.

Poppy Day

The annual American Legion auxiliary Poppy Day is May 25.

American Legion auxiliary poppies are made by bed and wheel chair patients in veterans hospitals (also by disabled veterans working in community centers) as part of their occupational therapy.

The American Legion auxiliary: supplies veterans free with materials for making poppies; enables veterans to earn money by paying them for every poppy they make; and arranges for volunteers to present poppies so that all funds collected are used for rehabilitation and child welfare.

Through the American Legion auxiliary poppy program more than $300,000 is paid annually to needy and disabled service men and women who make the memorial flowers. All contributions received from Poppy day go directly to aid disabled war veterans or members of their families.

Poppy day, an annual memorial to the war dead and disabled veteran, is sponsored by the American Legion auxiliary. By "wearing a poppy" Poppy day, each American can honor the sacrifice made by our service men while assisting the living.

The GOP Chooses

More than three decades ago the regular Republicans of Wisconsin, confronted with the capture of the popular party machinery by the insurgent LaFollette of the party, established a separate and campaign organization to represent their and to serve their interests. One of the uses of the "voluntary committee," so-called as to endorse "regular" candidates for the primary elections, to distinguish them for the voters from the LaFollette group.

A decade and a half ago the LaFollette party as an identifiable organization died, but the Republican organization of "Stalwarts," as they were sometimes called, continued as the most important campaign arm of the Republican party which by that time had risen to unchallenged power in Wisconsin. The endorsement practice was continued, despite some occasional criticisms and failures, and it will be the main event in state politics this week.

More than 3,500 county caucus delegates of the organization will meet in Milwaukee during the weekend. Their principal business will be to endorse candidates for the September primary election, from U. S. senator down through state treasurer. The outlook is for one of the liveliest floor fights in years between the backers of Philip Kuehn of Milwaukee, the 1960 gubernatorial nominee, who wants to head the ticket again and Lt. Gov. Warren P. Knowles, whose friends believe it is his turn to run for governor after more than 20 years of service in the state capitol.

Gerald J. Crawley, the top senior in veterinary medicine at Iowa State university, is the school's first veterinarian to be graduated in the honors program. His individualized study program has made it possible for him to do research while completing undergraduate work. He is shown here adjusting the electrocardiograph as he monitors the change in the electrical phenomenon of the dog's heart. The dog is one of 50 used by Crawley in his study of serum enzymes in dogs with induced cardiac changes.

Palmyra Graduate at Iowa State May Be First Honors Program Veterinary Graduate

Gerald J. Crawley, top student in the class of 1962 in Iowa State university's college of veterinary medicine may be the nation's first veterinarian to be graduated at an honors program.

The honors program at Iowa State is for outstanding students with at least a 3.5 (B-plus) grade average. The university waives certain required courses to permit honors students to develop an individualized study program to meet their particular needs and interests. The students may take advanced courses and undertake research not normally offered in their curricula.

At commencement exercises May 26, Crawley will become the first graduate of the honors program in veterinary medicine at Iowa State. School officials believe theirs to be the only honors program in a professional school of veterinary medicine in the United States.

Attended Palmyra High School, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Crawley, rte. 2, Eagle, Gerald entered the honors program after his sophomore year so he could take graduate courses in conjunction with his undergraduate work. As a result, he will receive a master's degree in veterinary physiology this summer just a few months after receiving his doctor of veterinary medicine degree.

"The honors program allowed me to take 25 or 26 credit hours a quarter rather than the regular load of 17 hours," Crawley explained. A graduate of Palmyra high school, Crawley, received a bachelor of science in agricultural education at the University of Wisconsin. He had planned to be a teacher, but when his brother, John, was graduated in veterinary medicine from Iowa State university in 1955, Gerald became interested in veterinary medicine and enrolled at Iowa State.

His brother affected Gerald's life another way, too. At the wedding of his brother, Gerald met the younger sister of his now sister-in-law. Five years later he married the younger sister. Now he and his wife, Dana, have two daughters, Jane Ellen, 21 months, and Gerriann, two months.

Crawley's research project for the honors program, involves studying serum enzymes in dogs with induced cardiac changes. The project was set up during his sophomore year when he applied to the Mark L. Morris Animal foundation for a fellowship. The fellowship provided funds for a yearly stipend and research.

He is studying three serum enzymes, which appear in the heart and liver. Damage to these organs can be determined by the amount of these enzymes found in the blood stream.

Works With Dogs

Crawley is doing his project exclusively with dogs. He operated on all the dogs, producing pathological heart conditions in 25 of them and using the other 25 as normal control group. Using an electrocardiograph, he monitors the change in the electrical phenomenon of the heart. This instrument also can be used in clinical diagnosis. He also uses a physiograph which picks up electrical phenomena plus heart sounds, but this is for research purposes only.

The serum is measured on a spectrophotometer which shines a beam of light directly on the solution. Comparing the deflection of the needle caused by the serum-containing enzymes against that of a normal solution without serum enzymes, he can determine the amount of enzyme present. By putting the three enzymes together, Crawley also tells which organ has been affected and closely approximates the amount of tissue damage.

Crawley will use this project for his thesis. He explained that little work with the electrocardiograph has been done with smaller animals, so he believes it will be used more as pets receive better care and live longer.

In addition to his honors program and fellowship work, he was physiology department student assistant one year and worked for Hardy Salt Co., St. Louis, one summer in the promotion of a worming product for cattle.

He received the Paul F. Starch Phi Zeta award his freshman year and the Borden scholarship award his junior year. During his sophomore year, he served as treasurer of the student chapter of the American Veterinary Medical association. He is a member of Alpha Zeta, agricultural honorary; Phi Zeta, veterinary; Phi Kappa Phi, all-university honorary; and Gamma Sigma Delta, agricultural honorary.

"After I receive the master's degree in August, Uncle Sam has plans for my future," Gerald smiled. "I hope to enter the veterinary corps or do research while in the service."
