Jericho Cemetery, located in the Town of Eagle, Wisconsin, serves as a historical resting place for the area's earliest pioneers.

Historical Foundations

- Establishment: While the earliest known graves date back to 1839, the cemetery was officially established in 1866.

- Land Acquisition: In 1867, William and Mary Wilton sold half an acre of land to the Jericho Cemetery Association, which continues to administer the site today.

- Naming: The name "Jericho" originated from Jerry Parsons, who built the first regular hotel in the area (called Jericho) in 1837; the name combined a syllable of his first name with the biblical city.

Notable Burials and Features

- Pioneer Families: The cemetery holds members of significant early families, including the Wiltons, James, and Powells.

- Notable Individuals:

  - Jane Powell (1813–1865): A local rooming house operator whose life is documented by the Eagle Historical Society.

  - Thomas and Anne James: Parents of Jane Powell, who died in 1863 at the ages of 99 and 97, respectively.

- Veterans: The site includes the graves of veterans from various conflicts, including the Civil War and Korean War.

- Records: Detailed cemetery and family records are maintained by the Eagle Historical Society for genealogical research.
