Former 'Survivor' gets no love

On 'Weakest Link,' unanimous vote sends her home

Wisconsin's most famous trucker appeared on another game show Thursday, but she didn't haul home any cash.

On NBC's "Weakest Link," Susan Hawk faced off against five fellow "Survivor I" veterans, including $1 million winner Richard Hatch.

The quiz show, like "Survivor," eliminates players at the end of every round by group vote. Ramona Gray won the $32,000 grand prize, which was to be donated to her favorite charity.

Although he answered most of his questions correctly, Hatch got the hook after the first round. The vote of the other five was unanimous.

Asked by host Anne Robinson why he thought former ally Hawk had voted against him, Hatch replied cheerfully: "That hairdo has made her stupid." Hawk's hair did appear to have been styled with a power saw and sprayed with shellac.

At the end of the second round, Hawk was hustled off, again by unanimous vote.

After her dismissal, Hawk, who became celebrated on "Survivor" for her salty tongue and take-no-prisoners attitude, said with breezy sarcasm: "I was voted off because I was the second most hated (member) of the panel. I wonder why."
