

COURTESY OF PEASD The Enterprise

Eagle students interpret writing

Eagle Elementary held an Interpretive Reading Assembly on March 2 in honor of National Read Across America Day. Interpretive reading is the sharing an interpretation of a book or author with an audience by solely reading with emotion, but with no props or actions. Students were encouraged to rehearse their performances, but not to memorize it. Each grade level from kindergarten through sixth had previously held their grade level competitions, so the event was an opportunity for the first-place winner of each grade to present to the entire school. The first-place winners were, shown left to right, (front) second-grader Blake Rataczyk, first-grader Ava Tisch, kindergartener Kennedy Basterash, (back) third-grader Will Herriges, fourth-grader Haley Woessner, fifth-grader Lainey Frederick and sixth-grader Meghan Butenhoff. Students who took second or third at the classroom level were presented with ribbons and certificates.

Artwork on display at the local libraries during Youth Art Month

The Palmyra-Eagle is recognizing Youth Art Month throughout the month of March by displaying artwork created by district students.

During March, which is nationally recognized as "Youth Art Month," artwork will be on display at both the Alice Baker Library in Eagle and the Powers Memorial Library in Palmyra.

Diane King, district elementary art teacher, and middle school/high school art teacher Cynthia Zuknik, chose the work that is being shown.

COURTESY OF PEASD The Enterprise

This is the display case at Alice Baker Library in Eagle showcasing artwork from students at Eagle Elementary. The case will be on display throughout March, which is Youth Art Month. There is also a case at Powers Memorial Library in Palmyra.